Alternative Investments – Their Rising Prominence in Asia's HNW & UHNW Portfolios and Opening the Door to Mass Affluent Investors

- Are alternative investments now a core element in the portfolios for Asia's wealthy investors? Why or why not, and should they be?
- Given the world's economic outlook, volatile geopolitics, the troubled fiscal state of many governments, the highly-priced mainstream equity markets and the prospects for inflation and possibly rising interest rates, what impact are all these factors having on the alternative assets markets worldwide?
- How should investors look at alternatives - for yield, gain, risk mitigation, downside protection, and what typical holding periods should they be considering?
- What types of portfolio allocations have HNW and UHNW investors made to alternatives thus far, and what positioning should they adopt for the future?
- What alternative assets should they be buying, or considering, and why?
- What is the wealth management community doing in Asia to cater to the growing demand and the potential for significantly greater allocations to alternatives amongst Asia's wealthier clients?
- How about the online/digital platforms? Are they boosting their curation and delivery of alternatives for intermediaries and for private clients directly and opening the doors to the mass affluent market?
- What are the safest ways to gain access and what are the dangers to be aware of in building greater exposures to alternative assets?
